Learning To Listen A Life

The first step in learning to listen is to learn to be quiet. Make a friend of silence. This can be difficult because nobody wants to be thought of as dull. There is a natural desire to respond quickly, and to be seen as interesting and smart. But if you resist this urge even a little bit, a new thing can begin to happen.

At Tech, Ross-Morrison strives to listen with emotional intelligence in her daily interactions. This requires what I call deep listening, or listening without an agenda in a way that fosters relational trust. The three pillars of deep listening are paying attention to nonverbal cues as indicators of emotion, expressing empathy in mature and caring ways, and modeling affirmation (verbal and nonverbal moves signaling that you value the other person).
